DETAILS

This activity starts and ends at our Base Camp in Trepmp. From our "headquarters", we will drive to a point where the Reserve guards will wait for us and accompany us to the observatory, within the Boumort National Game Reserve.

Then we will arrive at the Boumort free refuge, from where we will go on foot to reach the highest point of the Reserve, Cap del Boumort, at 2,077 m. A circular excursion of about 2 hours.

At night we will arrive at our Base Camp, where you can enjoy a well-deserved rest, and remember the day we lived. You can enjoy a good sauna and spa, before having dinner on the barbecue, with local lamb and a fantastic D.O. Costers del Segre, for example.

THE RESERVE

We are in front of a typically pre-Pyrenean landscape with steep mountain ranges and quite rugged relief that gives rise to strong contrasts, which favors a great diversity

The Serra de Boumort Protected Natural Area coincides with the Boumort National Hunting Reserve, with an area of 13,097 ha. It is a protected area since 1991 and is located in the western Catalan Pyrenees, between the Noguera Pallaresa and Segre valleys, encompassing a whole series of mountain ranges arranged transversely from one valley to the other, among which the Boumort mountain range that gives its name stand out. to the Reserve, the Carreu mountain range, the Cuberes mountain range and the Batsacans mountain range.

The maximum heights of the Reserve are reached in Cap de Boumort (2,077 m), in Pi Sec (1,917 m) and in Cap de Carreu (1,848 m).

The reserve stands out for being the only place in Europe where the continent's four species of vultures breed: griffon vulture, black vulture (reintroduced since 2007), bearded vulture and Egyptian vulture. In 2019, 10 new black vulture chicks were born and developed.

The Boumort National Game Reserve has been a pioneer in the use of observatories or viewpoints for the observation and photography of wild fauna. The Boumort observatory came into service in 2004 and was one of the first in Catalonia to respond to a modern vision of wildlife observatories: integrated into the landscape, with electric light and a toilet. Since then, and once the project for the reintroduction of the black vulture in the Pre-Pyrenees began, it has allowed numerous birdwatchers and nature photographers to enjoy the observation of the four species of European vultures. Other species of raptors, mammals such as foxes or deer, and birds such as the shrike are also observed.

THE OBSERVATORY

The observatory has a gross surface area of 11.5 m². It is covered with stone from the area, in order to integrate it into the environment that surrounds it. It allows to have 360° of observation in order to give a panoramic view of the feeding area.

It consists of different modules:

- Observation space: this hexagonal space of about 6 m² of net surface (9.3 m² built) is used to observe the birds of the ram. The fact of having given it this hexagonal shape allows the observation to be made from the 6 existing sides. This aspect, in terms of photography, allows you to use one window or another, depending on the light and the time of day.

- Annex space: this cube-shaped space has a net surface area of 2.2 m² (4.5 m² built). The front door is located in this area. There are shelves to store supplies and a small sink.
- Water trough and bathing area for fauna: from the reservoir that collects rainwater there is an overflow that leads the water to a pool of about 10 meters in diameter that allows the fauna to water and give it the possibility of bathing.
